

International Strategic Plan

The international strategic plan here sets the direction of the National Museum of Japanese History in the pursuit of its mission as a museum-based inter-university research institute and its role as an international site to promote research on Japanese History and Culture conducted from a contemporary standpoint and in world historical perspective.

Institutional Cooperation

- To enhance international cooperation with overseas institutions

Focal points for the next several years include three regions:
East Asia, Europe and North America
- To develop an international network of research on Japanese History

Collaborative Research and Dissemination of Achievements

- To promote international collaborative research and to reinforce global dissemination of achievements
- To attain full recognition of achievements of the collaborative research and to advance refinement in the research through exhibitions, symposia and sharing of the museum's materials

Development of Young Researchers

- To foster development of young researchers through scholarly exchange and collaboration with institutions under the cooperation agreement

July 26, 2016